Weekends and daily routine

Choose the most appropriate answer from the options (A-D) for each gap in the text.

Time off does not mean doing nothing all the weekend. Many Britons enjoy improving their houses. They spend a lot of their time off [1]..... do-it-yourself jobs: painting and wallpapering the rooms, putting up new shelves, doing repair work or fitting new cupboards in the kitchen. They sometimes go to the DIY (do-it-yourself) shops [2]..... some tools.

British people like gardening as well. They have flowers, vegetables and lawns in their gardens. Once a week they have to cut the lawn with a lawnmower.

On Sundays most British people spend a [3]..... time over breakfast, reading the Sunday paper. Then they take their cars out of the garage and polish them. On Sundays in Britain many families eat a big lunch of roast meat and vegetables. In the afternoons the families often drive to visit [4]..... relatives. They stay to tea and supper. In summer, when the days are longer, they sometimes [5]..... early on Sunday morning to spend a day at the seaside or in the country. To make a change they sometimes decide to visit a historic castle or a stately home (a big house belonging to an aristocratic family.)

Not everybody in Britain is [6]..... in sport or in outings. They are also enjoy going to the theatre to see good plays, to the cinema to see films, often in a foreign language, to concerts and to the opera. But this kind of entertainment [7]..... expensive and it is largely a city activity. Towns and cities also have public art galleries and museums, these are mostly free. An especially British activity, [8]..... may count as cultural entertainment, is attendance at day and evening classes in Adult Institutes and Colleges of Further Education. Some people may go to practical classes [9]..... dressmaking or car maintenance, but many go [10]..... pleasure to do pottery or ballet dancing, to learn how to arrange flowers artistically, or to learn a foreign language.
