Star is trying to continue her autobiography. She needs your help. CLICK the correct answer & prepare to tell her WHY.

Star finally got – has got the job that friends have – had mentioned, before. She has been / had been very happy about getting it, too. What has – had she been doing for – since she started this new job? If she can – could get her ideas straight in her head, today, she will tell – would have told you about it, but hole – whole other secret thoughts are in the anti-chamber – antechamber of her mind. Now, the author doesn't mean to infer – imply that Star can't be discrete – discreet, nothing could be farther – further from the truth, but a weasly doubt, which – witch – that won't go away, about her ability to talk about something she still doesn't know the words for raises – rises its ugly head. "When I got – went to my new job," she stated, "I didn't expect to be effected – affected by the weirdness of my colleagues, but they are something else! My first moments on the job were historic – historical. I changed – got beet red every time I saw them in their skimpy Brazilian Carnival costumes in the office. I even had to get – make a tall partition from the stock room to put up around my desk. I had – have since taken the partition down because they got – found me peeking! So much for my American prudery! Now when it's Carnival time, I wear – put off a colorful feathery costume, too!" Let's get Star back on track, though. She needs to describe her job, although she doesn't know all the words, yet. "In my old job, I am used to opening – used to open the office, every day. For this new job, I will – am be in the office every other day to open up, but also to, umm, how do you say it?, ... say very nice things to clients who look at themselves in our dressing room mirror to see if the clothes fit. If they think that the clothes fit, nicely, people usually buy – would buy them. Ah, yes, I remember now, I need to compliment – complement the clients."
