Practice 1

Questions 1 – 7 are based on the following passage. Choose the best answer to fill in each blank.

I can still remember my father vividly. He built the house on Langely Lake for my mother, in the town she (1) up in. It was a hundred miles from the glassy skyscrapers my father built in the city (2) the Upper East Side.

The house on Langely Lake looked unlike any of the other houses in town, with their greying vinyl siding and slouching car porch. No, the house on Langely Lake wasn't a house at all. It was a three-storey fortress, built of stones, with a thick fence and (3) hedges all the way around.

When I was a little girl, we spent our summers in that fortress. I remember slumber parties in a tent on the back lawn and afternoons spent sunning on the raft just off shore. I remember tall glasses of (4) lemonade sweating on the patio and the sundresses my mother wore and her wide brimmed hats.

Once I thought my father had built that house to keep everyone else out, (5) then my uncle Thomas found the photographs. They were in a shoebox, hidden under a loose floorboard in my parents' bedroom. They were (6) that summer, 2008, a few weeks before my mother disappeared. I saw the photographs and I realised I had been wrong about (7).

My father hadn't built the house on Langely Lake to keep everyone else out. He'd built it to keep us in.

Questions 9 – 15 are based on the following passage.

Seattle photographer, Jennifer Loomis, decided she was ready to adopt a child. As she (9) through blurry photos of children in the Northwest Adoption Exchange (NWAE) website one night, she struggled to feel a connection. "I couldn't get a sense of (10) the children were," Jennifer says.

She emailed the organisation that night, (11) to photograph the children. With 18 years of experience as a documentary and portrait photographer, she believed she (12) use her skills to bring out each child's personality. After the NWAE gratefully accepted her offer, she (13) a photo shoot with five boys and two girls, aged nine to 17. To entertain the children, she brought her dog and a trampoline, along with a make-up artist. Local businesses donated balloons and food. "I wanted to see the children smile and laugh," she says. One of the prospective adoptive parents visited to website and were (14) drawn to one child, Deon. They said that it was Deon's sparkling happy eyes that encouraged them to pursue an adoption.

NWAE won't disclose how many children have been adopted (15) date, but a spokesperson says the photos have been an 'invaluable tool' in matching the children with families.

As for Jennifer, she did not adopt a child. In July 2014, she gave birth to a son. Meanwhile, she will continue photographing foster children. "Their lives depend on it," she says. She is still using her photography talents to help foster children find homes.
