- A. Lapta, a traditional Russian sports game, is over four centuries old. Balls and bats dating back to the 14th century have been found among the ruins of Novgorod the Great. In the 18th century lapta was an important activity for physically preparing the soldiers of Peter the Great's army. Later the game became a major pastime. Today lapta is not very popular.
- B. Apologies are the way to build good friendships and relationships. When you say “I'm sorry” (and really mean it), it's because you probably feel bad that something you did or said hurt another person. Saying you're sorry is more than just words. You're also saying that you respect the other person and you care about his or her feelings. Apologizing shows you have empathy.
- C. The Russian doll, or matryoshka, to use the Russian name, is one of the most recognizable symbols of Russia. It as an example of the nation's ancient traditions of woodworking and decorative handicrafts. There has always been a demand for the matryoshka, both as a children's toy and as a gift, and the doll has always been a symbol of the family.
- D. Anna Lawrence is a fantastic storyteller and the truth behind the character's family creates a mystery for the reader. The book reflects the social problems of the city where the action takes place. But what really makes the author's style special is her skill of describing the characters; they are real humans in search of their identity and place in the world.
- E. The Stolby nature reserve is one of the most popular tourism destinations in Siberia. We recommend booking a nice cottage when you go there. There are separate small cottages for six and eight people, and a hostel. The cottages area is called ‘the village’ and is a bit of a hike from the reserve's main reception buildings but there is a car service for when you first arrive with your luggage.
