Destination: Education!
Peter Cox tells us about his holiday experience.

A few months ago I talked to my parents about the idea of studying abroad during my Christmas break. I was excited when they said yes, but I had no idea where I wanted to go!

I had surfed the Internet by myself for a few weeks before I got a very helpful email from a friend. It was all about a company called Education First. It gives students the chance to study abroad for some weeks, months or even a year. The website looked amazing. How about learning French in Paris? Or Japanese in Tokyo? There were so many options!

After days of thinking, I took a decision. I was going to New York for two weeks to learn English. When I got there, I was amazed. The city was loud and exciting; everything I had hoped for. On top of this, the school was great. The teachers were friendly and helpful and the other students were very fun. In the evenings, we went out for dinner or to the cinema to practise our English skills. It was a fantastic way to make learning fun.

By the end of the second week, I was sad to leave. I had learned so much and had made some really good friends. But the best thing about my Education First experience was that it gave me my first experience of travelling and adventure. Now I'm planning to spend a week in Dublin this summer to improve my English even more. So, if you've always wanted to travel and you love to learn, why not try it for yourself?"
