The Boy who was Taught to Talk by Dolphins

For young Nikki Brice, the daily swimming sessions with the dolphins in a pool in Florida were simply part of a fun holiday with his family. But the real purpose was to see if it could motivate him to talk.

All his life Nikki had never spoken a word, even though he had the physical ability to speak. All the techniques the doctors tried in Britain failed, so eventually, in desperation, Tabitha, his mother, took him to the dolphin pool in Florida to try to get him to talk.

Tabitha flew to Florida with Nikki after raising £10,500 with the help of family, friends and celebrities. Nikki was given a combination of speech therapy and daily forty-minute swimming sessions in a pool with a team of eight dolphins. After just three days of the seventeen-day treatment at the Dolphin Human Therapy Centre in Miami, Nikki spoke his first magic word.

It was one marvelous morning. Nikki's mother was taking him out of the pool when he firmly grabbed her hand, pointed to the dolphins in the pool and said, 'In.'

'He was telling us that he wanted to get back in the water,' said Tabitha. 'We just stood there in shock because it was so unexpected.' Since that first word, Nikki has spoken other words like 'please' and 'duck'.

Doctors at the centre say that they are very pleased that Nikki has spoken so soon after starting his treatment. A speech therapist in London said that this kind of treatment would not repair any brain damage but if a child was suffering from lack of confidence, swimming with dolphins might help.

Before Nikki's breakthrough, Tabitha said that they had only heard about, but not seen, children getting better. 'I had never expected Nikki to make such good progress so quickly. I'm hoping that his next words will be "Hello Mum"! There is something magical that happens between children and dolphins, something I don't think we will ever fully understand.'
