1. THE WAR OFFICE PROPAGANDA
2. CHANCES FOR SIGHTSEEING
3. WINNING DRESSES
4. STARS ARE ALWAYS STARS
5. A NEW GAME WEEK
6. TO HONOUR THE FORMER STAR
7. MEN AND WOMEN IN ART

- A. There are many stops on the trail of an Oscars campaign. Nominees do face time at the galas for the various guilds (writers, directors, producers). And then there's the daytime meet-and-greets at American Film Institute and the nominees luncheon for the Academy Awards themselves. But the clothes get louder where the cameras get brighter at the Golden Globes and later the SAG Awards. A highly subjective ranking of how stars showed up and showed off.
- B. "Act of Valor" blends fiction and realism, casting active-duty service members as Navy SEALs (the babes and the bad guy are actors). But some critics question whether the Pentagon has played too large a role in this big-budget Hollywood picture.
- C. In her best, loosest moments, Twyla Tharp choreographs the way Woody Allen writes – with a keen understanding of personality, idiosyncratic rhythm and the essence of the performer. In much the same way that Allen crafted the title character of "Annie Hall" (1977) to distill perfectly Diane Keaton's offbeat hesitations and craziness Tharp created the leading male role in "Push Comes to Shove" (1976) to tease out the contradictions, playfulness and sexual tension coiled up inside ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov. The portrait still feels right all these years later, even when danced by another man in entirely different circumstances.
- D. America's favorite quiz show "Jeopardy!" is coming to Washington again for a Power Players Week. It's only the third Power Players Week in the show's 28-year history; the first time was in 1997, and the other time was in 2004. The syndicated hit's producers haven't announced who will compete this year, but don't expect a lot of politicians who are now in office.
- E. The new Mob Museum in Las Vegas, which opened Feb. 14, is a late-generation design that uses many of the same tools and techniques one finds at similar venues focused on subjects where popular culture and history are too complicated to be understood. Think of the International Spy Museum or the Crime Museum (billed as "a must-see for CSI fans"), both in Washington and both conveniently located in a neighborhood near the Mall where the white marble of history blends into the neon lights of food, drink and fun.
- F. And yet as you wander through this exhibition of 77 works by 35 (mostly unknown) artists, many of which have never been seen outside of France, there's always the possibility that something more is happening. The show is heavy with portraits, in part because female artists were allowed to pursue portraiture as a form more in keeping with gender expectations. Yet many of these relatively conventional portraits are uncommonly interesting, especially those of male sitters. Is there a psychic reversal here, an inversion of the usual power dynamic between the "male" gaze and the submissive "female" subject?

Funny hiking stories

I was just looking through some photos of past hikes and remembered some pretty funny moments. I'm sure everyone has one or two, here's a few of mine:

While ascending the Huntington Ravine trail last year, my wife and I came to one of the crossings of the Cutler River. It was flowing pretty well and we were both carrying pretty heavy packs, since we had planned to descent the Great Gulf trail and camp somewhere north of Spaulding Lake. My wife was a little nervous about the crossing and asked if I could stay close to steady her if she started to slip on the rocks. On either the first or second step I took, my foot started to slip off one of the nearly submerged rocks. Faced with either stepping directly into a foot and a half deep water or just leaping to the next rock and hoping for the best, I chose the latter (I guess I'm an eternal optimist). I made that rock, but my momentum wouldn't allow me to stop, so I leaped again, and again, and again. Within 2 seconds flat, I landed on the other side of the river, upright and completely dry! I turned around to see my wife just staring at me, mouth wide open. After we finished laughing, I left my pack and crossed back over to help her across. I still have no idea how I made it across, since I've been known to trip on totally flat pavement!

The following day, descending on Glen Boulder trail, it was starting to get late and the winds were gusting pretty well. There had been 75 to 80 mph winds at the summit, and the gusts sometimes threw us off balance on some of the rocky parts we needed to climb down. As the sun disappeared behind Boott Spur, I tried to hurry the pace. After a couple of occasions where I got a bit ahead of my wife, she asked me to stay closer so I could help her down some of the awkward spots. The very next scramble we get to, I hopped down, turned around to make sure she's ok and then continued on thinking she was right behind me. After about 30 to 35 feet, I looked back to see her still on the rocks, staring at me with a look on her face that said «what... did I... just... ask... ???». Yea, she didn't quite see the humor in that one, and my guilty laughter definitely didn't help.
