The Origins of Thanksgiving day

The meaning of Thanksgiving day dates back to the origins of America. In 1620 a group of Dissenters or Separatists, the Pilgrim fathers, sailed towards the New World on a ship called Mayflower. They moved to the new country to find a better life and new lands to grow, but mainly to find religious freedom. They were against the Church of England and the English King James I.

The trip was very long and it lasted more than what they imagined. They arrived on the coasts of Massachusetts which was far north. These circumstances got them to find a hard winter to face. A lot of the people died due to hunger and starvation. It was only in the spring of the next year that thanks to the native Americans, who visited the village, taught them how to grow crops and how to hunt and fish. They were very happy when they saw that the next crops were abundant, and gave them the opportunity to go on living in the new country. They thanked the native Americans preparing big meals made of all the goods they grew : corn, pumpkins and also some of the ducks and turkeys they learnt to raise.
