GOLD

Since civilisation began, gold has been regarded as a symbol of power and wealth. In many societies gold was seen as a magic substance which could protect people against illness or evil spirits. It is the one material that has always been accepted in exchange for goods or services. Mankind never seems to have enough gold and the search for it has driven men mad. The need to search for gold has been compared to a disease and it is called 'gold fever'. In spite of man's constant search for gold, the amount which has been produced since the beginning of time is only enough to make a solid block of eighteen cubic metres, the size of a large house.

Because gold is workable, almost indestructible, durable, reflective and conductive, it has a number of industrial uses. About ten per cent of the annual production is used for industrial processes. Because gold is valuable, bright, rare, attractive and durable, it has always been used for decorative purposes. Gold works of art were created by many of the great civilisations of the past and may be seen in museums all over the world.

The first gold coin was issued by King Croesus of Lydia in the sixth century BC. Today gold still plays an important part in the international monetary system. About thirty years´ production of gold is being held by central banks and monetary authorities in spite of efforts to reduce its importance. New deposits of gold are being found and old mines are being reopened. Undoubtedly gold has always been valued as a protection against inflation and it is likely to continue being so. Gold can be bought by private investors in the form of bars, coins and medals, as well as jewellery.
