Cell Phones in School?

The dos and don'ts of mobile education.

Benefits

We all agree that mobile phones are present in the classrooms. Recently, researchers at the Center for Education Policy and Law at the University of San Diego, the USA, have studied this case. The investigation shows that students depend on their mobile phones to keep them organised. The calendar, alarms and camera (usually to take photos of a teacher's notes) are constantly used by students. 'One pupil said his device was essential for "remembering things" and without his mobile phone he would "forget to take homework in a lot".'

All in all, this study proposes that mobile devices are a good learning tool for the classroom nowadays.

The other side of the coin - Worried People

A study conducted in the USA reveals that some people are worried about schools allowing students to use mobile phones freely at school. The investigation shows that seven out of ten students think mobile phones help learning, but the rest 30 percent of the public feels the negative effects of smartphones at school They think mobile phones can cause general distraction (for example, phones ringing during class) cheating and cyberbullying.

Possible Solution?

Schools should consider integrating mobile devices into lesson plans to make classes more fun. Teachers should allow students to use their mobile phones if it is benefitial for their learning. However, there must be clear rules to know how to use them correctly only when the teacher gives them permission.

1- There have been investigations about mobile phones in a) the USA b) the UK

2- Researchers found out that mobile phones a) help students to be more organised
