Ryan's Well

Canadian Ryan Hreljac was just six years old when he found out that not everybody in the world had clean water just by turning on a tap. His teacher told his class there were places in Africa where people didn't have any clean water to drink, wash or cook with. People got sick from the dirty water and some died.

Ryan thought everyone lived like he did, with clean water always nearby. When he found out that wasn't the case, he decided to do something about it. He wanted to build a well, which he thought cost $70. His parents suggested doing extra chores. Ryan did chores at home for some time to earn $70. But then he learned that it was actually going to cost $2,000 to build a well in a place like Uganda. Ryan raised money by speaking at school and in the community about the well he wanted to build at Angolo Primary School in Uganda. He asked for support for his project and people contributed money.

When Ryan and his parents travelled to the village in Uganda to see the difference his well had made, he was welcomed like a hero. Children no longer had to fetch water in buckets from distant wells. Meals could be cooked safely. For the people of the village, a little boy had performed a miracle that even governments could not accomplish. This encouraged Ryan to do more.

That's how his school project became the Ryan's Well Foundation. Since then, over 800 wells in 16 countries have been built, improving the lives of almost 1,000,000 people. The foundation continues to support water projects in Africa.
