Life in the year 2060

What will life be like in 2060? Will life be better, worse or the same as now? We asked three futurologists to tell us about their vision of life in 2060.

Entertainment

There won't be any TV. Everyone will watch TV programmes and films on their computers. And there won't be any books. People will read books and newspapers on their computers, too.

Communication

Although today most people have mobiles, in 2060, everyone will talk by 'videolink' – when someone sends you a message, you'll see a small image of them. It'll be exactly like they're in the room with you!

Environment

The climate will be much warmer than now because of global warming, and some countries will be under water because of the melting ice and snow in the Arctic and Antarctic. Food will be very expensive and many people will grow their own food in their gardens.

Transport

Cars will use electricity and other alternative fuels instead of petrol. And cars will have computers so that they will drive safely, and automatically find the right way to your destination. People will go to the Moon and other planets on spaceships for their holidays.

Work

Robots will replace people in factories. By 2060, we will see robots everywhere – in factories, schools, offices, hospitals, shops and homes. They will work hard and they won't need holidays or time off!

A black and white photograph of a humanoid robot with a spherical head and a long neck, wearing a white suit. It is holding a vacuum cleaner and is in the process of vacuuming a dark-colored sofa in a modern living room. In the background, there is a coffee table and a window.
