§1. Believe it or not, I used to read Flight International every week from the age of eight onwards — my father, an aviation engineer, encouraged my early passion for planes but I never thought that one day I would be working on it as a journalist.

§2. Flight International is read by anyone with an interest in aviation. From pilots to manufacturers, technicians to air vice marshals, all are readers looking for the latest news in this sector. As news editor, I'm responsible for deciding ' what appears on the 20 news pages we produce each week. Aviation is one of the few truly global industries and we have a team of reporters around the world. When I left school, my original plan was to become an engineer. I studied aeronautical engineering at university but found the course rather unsatisfactory. At the time there was a huge recession on with few jobs going, and I was forced to look round for other options. I actually wrote to Flight and asked for a job. The then deputy editor advised me to do a course in journalism which had just been set up, which is what I did.

§3. I found the course useful not so much because it gave me a pretty good basic grounding in journalism, but mainly because it focused on several work placements, which I was able to do at Flight. I wrote a few pieces and got my face known at the magazine. When the course finished there were no jobs available on Flight so I went off and worked for an aviation newsletter. After a year or so the technical reporter at Flight moved to another job and I was in. The great thing for me about working here has been the chance to ask people questions about something I'm genuinely interested in, and to combine it with my other passion, travel After a couple of years I was offered a job in Munich in Germany.

§4. It was fantastic timing as the aviation industry in eastern Europe was just opening up and I got to report on it and see the region. From there I went to Singapore, which again was an extraordinary experience. I got to fly over the Far East, visiting factories, meeting fascinating people and doing interviews, and to be honest I would have been happy to stay there a bit longer.

§5. However, jobs like this don't come up very often — the last news editor stayed ten years — and so when I was offered it, I couldn't really say no. Although I'm much more office-based now, I still go to the big air shows. In some ways I was getting a bit tired of living out of a suitcase, although I still get a thrill when I take my seat on a new plane for the first time.

A37. Why did the writer read Flight International when he was a child?

- 1) He wanted to become an airline pilot.
- 2) He was very interested in planes.
- 3) He dreamt of becoming a journalist on it.

A38. What did the writer like about the journalism course he took?

- 1) It was a new course.
- 2) It gave him basic knowledge of the job.
- 3) It gave him the chance to make contacts at Flight.

A39. What does the writer say he particularly enjoys about working at Flight?

- 1) the chance to do the two things he most loves
- 2) the opportunity to travel a great deal
- 3) the opportunity to meet interesting people

A40. What does the writer like about his current post?

- 1) leading a more settled life
- 2) working in an office
- 3) travelling in new planes

It was back in 1995, when my husband Eric was working as a rubbish collector for the local town council, that I first got the idea of recycling clothes. He would frequently find bags of perfectly good clothes just thrown into the rubbish. I wondered if I would be able to do something with them which would make money for me and perhaps even help the community at the same time. I decided to give it a try.

The first thing I did was to place an advertisement in the newspaper inviting people in the neighbourhood to bring me their second-hand clothing, shoes and bedding instead of throwing them away. Within a week, our garage was bursting with black plastic bags. (A43) This kept me busy for weeks.

At the same time, I was also looking for a shop to rent where I could sell these items. (A44) , But it wasn't until I contacted AdVenture, an organization which helps people to set up their own businesses, that I finally got the assistance I needed. They helped me find the right shop and gave me advice about getting a business loan to get me started. That's how Second Best was born.

For my idea to work, I was going to need a steady supply of clothes. The town council already had recycling bins for paper, glass and the like. (A45) I was able to make arrangements to have the clothes collected and brought to my shop, where I had installed laundry facilities to cope with all the washloads I needed to do!

It wasn't only making money in the shop that interested me, though. I was still eager for the community to benefit from my idea, too, so I started to find ways that the large quantities of very old or damaged clothing that I couldn't sell in the shop could be put to use. (A46) Some of the old clothing is now turned into bandages for hospitals, for example, while one school in the area asks for old jeans to make into lunch bags.

AdVenture believes in encouraging people by giving an annual Special Merit Award to the most successful new business they have helped. (A47) Not only had I helped so many others, they said, but I had also had to overcome a major difficulty. In 2000, my shop had been destroyed by fire and I had had to start the business all over again from scratch.

Getting back on track wasn't easy. Not only did I have to search for another shop to rent, but I also had to spend time building up new stocks of clothes, as nearly all of the original stock had been destroyed. (A48) Otherwise, I would have been forced to call it a day. Today, twelve years after I first started up, Second Best is a very successful small business.
