

Julie's Trip
Kathy Hufford

Julie woke up bright and early without having to be pulled out of bed by her mother for once. Today was the day her class would take a trip to the dairy farm. They had been preparing for three weeks to go on this field trip and she was not going to risk missing it by being late to school.

It would be a long bus ride from the city to reach the farm. Julie looked forward to playing games and singing songs on the bus with her friends Carol, Leah and Jessica. Their teacher, Mrs. Evans, had told them about a game they could play on the bus called "I Spy." In this game, they would take turns describing something they saw and the others would try and guess what it was.

Julie tried to imagine the sights she would see, but Julie had never been out of the city and she had never even seen a live cow before! Today she would see lots of cows, chickens and other barnyard animals. She might even be picked to try milking a cow. What if she was scared? She quickly put that thought out of her mind. Julie knew that her teacher and the farmer would be right there to tell her what to do and to keep her safe too.
