Public transport in and around Glasgow is coordinated by SPT (spt.org.co.uk).

- Bus City bus services, mostly run by First Glasgow, are frequent. You can buy tickets when you board buses, but on most you must have the exact change. Short journeys in town cost £1.40 or £2.15, a day ticket (£4.50) is good value and is valid until 11am when a night network starts. A weekly ticket is £10.00. Check route maps online at www.spt.org.co.uk.
- Train & Underground There's an extensive suburban network of trains in and around Glasgow. Tickets should be bought before travel if the station is staffed, or from the conductor of a train. There's also an underground line, the Subway, that serves 15 stations in the centre, west and south of the city (plus 11 BRT). The train network connects with the subway at Buchanan Street underground station, next to Queen Street underground station, and at Euston underground station, near Central railway station. The All Day Ticket (£4) gives unlimited travel on the Subway for a day, while the Revolution ticket gives a day's unlimited train and Subway travel for £20.00. The subway runs only while there are trains on a Sunday.
- Combined Ticket The Daytravel ticket gives you a day's unlimited travel on buses, the Subway, rail and some ferries in the Glasgow region, including Loch Lomond, Argyll and Lomondshire. It costs £11.00 for one adult or £20.00 for two. Two kids per adult are included free.
