SONG OF THE PRESENT PERFECT

The song of the present perfect has come here to say you're fine if you use it for something that started in the past that's still going at the present time Like when I say "I've _____ your friend for years"
It means we met some years ago and we're still friends, my dear

The song of the present perfect has come here to say: hey man you can use it for something that happened in the past …but you don't need to explain exactly when Like when I say: "I've been to the UK"
It means I went there in the past but you don't know what day

In the last few minutes I have _____ this tune somehow You have heard a minute of this song up to now I have _____ my words and I don't know what I can say I hope I've _____ myself quite clear, with it now you can play

The song of the present perfect has come here to tell you that You can use it at the time when a thing takes place but its time hasn't _____ yet Like when you say "I've been outside today"
The night has not _____ yet - it's the same day, so you can use it, mate!

Finally the present perfect it's really handy (and not a crime) when the action of the verb you are using has some effects in the present time Like when I say, "Hey look what I have done!"
I have just writing you this song and you can hear it now!

In the last few minutes I have sung this tune somehow You have heard two minutes of this song up to now and after all of this I hope that you haven't _____ bored and the present perfect for you is not a problem anymore

come
got finished made lost
sung
