The New Kid

Joe walked into his new school. He felt apprehensive because he had never been there before. What would he say? Would he have any friends? The hallway seemed gargantuan because he was so small. He relished his classroom, though, because everything was neat and very colorful. Joe liked his teacher. She seemed so exultant. He knew this because she smiled all the time.

The first student he encountered was George. George's crimson hair resembled the color of the clay in a baseball diamond. George relocated from Washington over the summer, and his family had bought a conventional house close to Joe's new house both houses were blue. The two boys became palsy-walsy. Everywhere one went the other one was somewhere close.

Joe decided that this new-fangled school was a commendable place. He wrote home to his old friends how great the school was. He couldn't wait for the next day!!!!
