ADDICTED TO CHRYSANTHEMUMS

Les Hunter has made history by becoming the first Barnsley man to be named a national champion chrysanthemum grower. The 74-year-old has been growing them for 49 years and he was excited to be named as champion by the National Chrysanthemum Society at a competition in Stafford.

It took Mr Hunter a year to prepare for the individual champion class, putting in hours of tender loving care since November last year to make sure his flowers were in tip top shape for the competition.

"There is no prize money or anything like that, it's purely for the prestige you get in the flower world. I've entered it before but only came third and fourth, and no-one in Barnsley has ever won before," he said.

Les had to take about 30 flowers down with him to the competition, which is held in a huge barn. He arranged the flowers in four vases.

"I'm quite a small grower compared to most," said Mr Hunter, a former miner. "A lot of people will grow thousands and thousands of flowers a year but I don't grow a lot; I've got about 80 altogether in the garden. I started growing flowers because I used to be a miner and in those days that is what you did: you either went to the pub or went to the garden. You can see what I chose to do. I love it and I'm addicted. Every year I say I'll give it up but I never do."

LUCKY STRIKE

William Hall stopped at an upstate New York store to get gas ... and instead got struck by lightning.

“The light itself was bright white surrounded by orange, and then the rush. It was like heat,” the 44-year-old Hall told Today's reporter in an exclusive interview in New York.

Mr Hall needs help from others to pick up the story from the moment the lightning hit, because that's the last thing he remembers before losing consciousness. In the video, he is seen collapsing by his white pick-up truck, bumping his head on the vehicle before falling on the wet pavement.

Mr Hall and his girlfriend, Kymberly Fenn, said it had been raining a little earlier, and they had seen a few bolts of lightning while they were driving to get gas. Mr Hall had pumped $8 worth of gas when a security camera captured the orange and white fireball erupting from the pavement a few dozen feet from the roof over the pumps.

After the strike, Miss Fenn looked behind the truck and didn't see her boyfriend. The video tape shows her getting out of the truck and bending over him. She and Mr Hall estimate that he was unconscious for four or five minutes. When he came to, Mr Hall saw Miss Fenn and store employees hovering over him. It soon became apparent that an ambulance was needed. “I wanted to get up, but my body wouldn't allow me to,” Mr Hall said. “I couldn't move. My heart was beating very fast. It was just ... very scary.”

The current apparently traveled through the rain slick on the pavement to Hall. It probably wouldn't have happened if the surface hadn't been wet. The chances of anyone being struck by lightning in his or her lifetime are about 5,000 to 1.

Mr Hall believes that his life was saved because he was holding the pump, which was grounded through his truck. He hurt his elbow, but otherwise he seems just fine.

Task 4

- Some sentence endings have been removed from this text about Cambridge students.
- Match the endings (A-G) below the text with the beginnings (24-28).
- There is one extra letter that you do not need. Write the letters in the white boxes as in the example (0).

CAMBRIDGE STUDENTS FAIL FIRE SAFETY TEST

They may be the cleverest and best - but Cambridge University students are the city's biggest fire hazard. The students have been named as the highest risk group in Cambridge after firefighters were called 113 times to places (0) _____.

According to Mr Meikle, a community fire officer for Cambridge, it is a fact that students are considered the highest risk group when they are in their rooms or in the kitchen. Often it's just foolish actions caused by tiredness and general stress. At the weekend, however, it seems to change to students (24) _____.

Students' practical jokes have also been blamed for the number of emergency calls. Once a plastic traffic sign was melted on a gas hob in King's College and a month later clothes caught fire (25) _____.

Mr Meikle also pointed out that hoax calls and practical jokes causing fire could bring serious consequences. He warned students that – depending on the gravity of the misbehaviour – they could face severe punishment, (26) _____.

Cambridge University chiefs have started campaigns along with the fire service and the students' union in order to keep students safe. A spokesman said: "The university takes fire safety very seriously. We have a central fire safety team (27) _____."

"If students feel they need more information, we believe the best thing to do is consult representatives from their college (28) _____."

Last year out of the 113 calls made to the fire service firefighters attended 17 blazes in colleges, which dropped to 12 blazes this year. Since April there have been five fires.
