SINGAPORE: PARENTS TAKE PRIMARY SCHOOL MATHS CLASSES

Parents in Singapore dust off their calculators: they are going back to school so they can understand their children's homework.

They are taking primary school maths classes _____ what their children go through. Adults are signing up for courses _____ when their children have questions, the My Paper website reports. Parents at a "mastery workshop" pay $700 (£463) _____ learning how to solve maths problems, the website says. It's part of a growing trend in Singapore.

Parents _____ are divided into groups depending on their existing knowledge and ability. "Some parents come to the workshop with zero maths knowledge, _____," says Nur Hidayah Ismail, the principal of the Genius Young Minds centre.

Some parents say it has helped them to understand their children's struggles. But for others _____ many years ago, things are more tricky. Mohd Yusof Maruwi, _____, found most of the questions surprisingly difficult. "Luckily, she could understand what was going on," he says.
