Can Smart Phones Harm Your Eyes?

Gone are the days when everyone used a telephone to make a call. Now most people rely on smartphones as the go-to gadget – and not just to chat. They text, play games and surf the internet. Young Brits are on their phones an average nine times an hour.

But as eye problems soar among under 25s, some doctors claim that smartphone addiction is partly to blame. And so is the overuse of computers, tablets, and flat-screen TVs, many of which emit blue-violet light, which is potentially toxic to the back of your eyes.

Recent tests show that over-exposure to blue-violet light can increase the chance of developing what is called a 'macular degeneration', a leading cause of blindness. It can also disrupt sleep patterns, affect moods and cause headaches.

What's the solution? "Get your eyes tested regularly and take regular breaks from your computer and phones," says optician Amanda Saint.

- ( 1 ) SUBJECT: Rodney is back in London
- ( ) Cheers, mate!
- ( ) Anyway, just writing 2 let u know that I'm coming back. I spent the last couple of months in France with Amy. Remember her? Well, it didn't work out, so I've decided to come back 2 London. I've managed 2 find a job. I'm gonna b working at the Jazz Café in Camden town. Brilliant, eh? I thought u'd like it since we spent like every weekend there. :D
- ( ) Just thought I'd say - no worries if u say no. Would b great 2 catch up anyways... Gimme a ring, I've still got the same number. Or just drop by the Jazz Café...
- ( ) Hey Brett,
- ( ) Actually, there was something else... Do u reckon it would be possible 2 crash out at your place for a week or 2? Just until I find a proper place. U know what looking for rooms in London is like. Some places r real dumps. Dunno if it's possible, but just thought I'd ask.
- ( ) Remember me, Rodney, the Aussie? How could u forget, we had such a laugh when I was here in London last summer, didn't we? How's it going, mate?
- ( 8 ) Rodney
