Hagrid's secret

Harry, Ron and Hermoine were sitting in the library. They had a lot of work. They were preparing for their exams. The teachers gave them so much homework that they didn't have time to go outside.

Suddenly they saw Hagrid, the Keeper of the Keys at Hogwarts, in the library.

"Hagrid! What are you doing in the library?" asked Harry.

"I'm just looking," answered Hagrid. He was hiding something behind his back. "Listen, come to see me later, will you? I cannot promise, but I want to show you something interesting."

"All right. See you later, then," said Harry.

"It's strange...What was he hiding behind his back?" said Hermoine.

Ron wasn't fond of learning, so he decided to go and see. Soon he came back from the shelves.

"Hagrid was looking for a book about dragons!" Ron said.

When the three friends came to see Hagrid that evening they saw a baby-dragon on the table. Hagrid said:

"I have always wanted to have a dragon as a pet!"

"But Hagrid, it's very dangerous," said Harry and Hermoine. "The dragon will not live in your small house for a long time! It is wild!" "I know," answered Hagrid, "but what can I do?"

But then Harry remembered Ron's elder brother,

Charlie, who lived in Romania. He was studying dragons. They decided to send Hagrid's dragon to Charlie because the climate of Romania was good for dragons and Charlie knew how to look after them.
