Task 2. Read and write T/F.A GAP YEAR

If you've done your last year of school but are not yet ready to settle down to life at university or college, why not think about taking a break and having a gap year? Over 200,000 people between the ages of 18 and 25 did this last year. The universities actively encourage it. Students who have had a gap year are more likely to be satisfied with their chosen courses and, therefore, are more likely to finish them.

Whether you decide to go on an expedition, travel, work as a volunteer or learn a new skill, there will be all sorts of benefits. You will become more confident and independent and learn to get on with all sorts of different people, which will help you when you go to university or college. If you are unsure about what to do, just type "gap year" into a computer and have a look at the enormous number of websites offering to sort things out for you.

Doing voluntary work overseas is one of the most rewarding ways of spending your gap year. It is a fantastic way of getting to know a different culture. If you don't want to work, there are plenty of other exciting educational possibilities to consider. How about studying art history in Italy? Perhaps you would like to take up acting and want to try a drama course in your gap year. But perhaps you would rather just fill your backpack and go off on adventure. Maybe it has always been your dream to visit China, or India or even Australia. Research shows that 36% of all gap year travellers are affected by a medical problem, while around 38% lose luggage and 14% lose cash. Shop around to get the best and cheapest insurance for your needs.

Of course, you don't have to leave home. The key to a constructive gap year is to learn new skills and work out what you want to do with your life. You can do this just as easily in your own country as you can on the other side of the world. Employers will always ask people who apply for jobs about what they gained from the year, not where they went.
