10/10

If you're interested in the business world, The Founder may be what you're looking for. The film tells the true story of how Ray Kroc, played by Michael Keaton, turned McDonald's into a global fast-food empire. The film shows a great example of how a small business can become a _____ by leveraging the right strategies and partnerships.

In the movie Kroc's success was largely due to his ability to raise funds from the _____. Also, we know that he worked closely with _____ to secure the capital he needed to expand the business, taking the huge risk of losing everything.

Another key factor in McDonald's success was its focus on the food _____. Kroc understood that in order to compete with other fast-food chains, he needed to provide a superior experience to customers. Now we can see how this restaurant is always placed in strategic locations, such as _____, in which people spend a lot of time buying clothes or hanging out with friends.

In the movie we are shown how Kroc recognized the importance of having a strong and big community, and allies to secure his franchises. He established new _____ to oversee the company's operations in different parts of the country, which allowed McDonald's to quickly adapt to local market conditions and preferences.

Overall, I believe that The Founder is the perfect film for anyone interested in business and entrepreneurship. It perfectly explains how a small idea can turn into a global phenomenon with the right vision and execution.
