Natasha's Five Rules for Trendspotters

Rule 1: Look, then look again. As a trendspotter, your job is to look carefully. When you see a style you like, look again. Ask yourself, is it really going to be a trend?

Rule 2: Lead, don't follow. Trendspotters should be bold. Trendspotters should be fresh. Trendspotters should always be out in front of the style. Always!

Rule 3: Be different, but connect. It's easy to find something that's unique and dramatic. But does your idea connect? Does it have any real meaning to real people? That's what you're looking for.

Rule 4: Forget old and new. New things can get old very fast. And old things can get new. Don't worry about old or new. Just look for things that make you smile. Retro can be trendy.

Rule 5: Be yourself. You're stylish. You know what's good. So go with it! Don't worry about what others think. Be yourself.

- 21. Trendspotters should never be different.
- 22. Trendspotters should never be different.
- 23. Trendspotters should look only for new things.
- 24. Trendspotters should worry about what everyone else thinks.
- 25. Trendspotters should remember that they're stylish.

Passage 2: Read the article and select the correct answer to the questions.

Many Americans love country music, particularly its guitar folk music and sad love songs. But where did country music come from? Like many things in the United States, country music came from a mix of cultures.

Over 200 years ago, groups of Europeans and Africans settled in the southern part of the U.S. These people brought their traditional musical instruments with them, such as banjos and fiddles. After a week of hard work, people would relax by playing and listening to music. Over time, musicians from different cultures introduced each other to their styles of music. They learned from each other and started mixing styles. Singers wrote new song lyrics about living a hard life in the U.S. This is how country music was born.

In the 1940s, radio became a popular source of entertainment. People could hear the best country singers and bands on the radio. Over 70 years later, country music radio stations are still among the most popular radio stations in America.
