Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

I walked over to the window and noticed that for some reasons, the street lights were out. Then, Mr. Chamberlain's front door opened, gushing a flash of brightness across his yard before it closed.

Peaches' nightly trip out, I thought.

I was about to pull the shades down when the trunk of the elm tree at the front of the Malik's property wavered and thickened. It couldn't be, but I had not seen anyone approaching it. I strained and thought I saw something small streak across the lawn and vanish into the shadow. Then, the tree moved again and then was still. At this moment, I heard Father checking if the door was locked, so I pulled down the shades and went to bed.

It was dawn when someone hammered against the door. Mother and Father hurried to the door. I snatched Pepper up and followed them, my heart thumping.

"Peaches!" Mr. Chamberlain cried, frantic. "Peaches ... she's gone!" He had fallen asleep instead of waiting up for his cat and now she was still not back. I thought about what I had seen in the dark and my heart skipped a couple of beats.

"Last night, I thought I saw Peaches cut across the lawn and run towards the elm tree next door," I said and everyone looked at me. Immediately, I regretted revealing that. I was not even sure if that was really Peaches. It could be a squirrel. Mr. Chamberlain squinted as if he were seeing me for the first time. He suspected that I had a hand in it. Frightened, I took a step back, clutching Pepper so tightly that she purred.

"Mr. Chamberlain," Mother said soothingly. "Jess wouldn't hurt your cat. She loves cats." Mother concluded that Mr. Chamberlain must be tired and upset and suggested that he go home. She also promised that we would look around the neighbourhood for Peaches.

I kept thinking about the tree "moving". I could not come to terms with that. I made straight for the tree while Mother went to the end of the block. I skirted the tree, the stack of boxes and plastic bags containing the Malik's trash. As waves of fishy odour of heat-spoiled tuna rose from the top bag, I fought to keep from vomiting.

"Tuna!" I suddenly gasped. Has she been drawn by the scent of her favourite meal? Gingerly, I approached the trash bag, but it hadn't been torn open by a ravenous cat. Then another thought too monstrous to ignore slid into my mind. "No," I whispered. My curiosity got the better of me and I untied the bag to look inside. I was relieved to find only the usual trash, but there was something weird. A can of tuna. Only a small amount was gone. Why would anyone throw away a whole can of tuna?
