#nomakeupselfie campaign started by teenage mum from Stoke raises £8m for Cancer Research

#nomakeupselfie campaign which has raised $8 million for Cancer Research was started by teenage mother from Stoke-on-Trent, it has emerged.

It has become one of Cancer Research UK's most successful fundraising drives, generating more than $8 million in less than a week. But the "no make-up selfie" campaign was not thought up by the national charity – instead, it was the brainchild of a teenage mother from Stoke-on-Trent, Staffs.

Fiona Cunningham, 18, decided to encourage people to share pictures of themselves without make-up on social media, and to donate money via text message to the cancer charity, after losing family members to the disease.

An estimated 2 million women across the world – including Kirstie Allsopp and Holly Willoughby, the television presenters, and Jemima Khan, the socialite* – have now taken part in the online craze. Cancer Research UK said it had been surprised by the "unprecedented" increase in donations in response to the unofficial campaign. It said the money would allow it to carry out 10 new clinical trials into the disease.
