136 Answer:

West Nile is a tropical disease that begins in birds, which pass it on to mosquitoes that then go on to infect human beings with a bite. Most people who contract West Nile do not experience any symptoms at all, but, if they do, symptoms typically develop between 3 to 14 days after a mosquito bite. About 1 in 5 persons suffers fever, headaches, and body aches, usually lasting a week or so. A far less lucky 1 in 150 experiences high fever, tremors, paralysis, and coma. Some — especially the elderly and those with weak immune systems — die.

That is what made the major outbreaks of West Nile in the U.S. in the summer of 2012 so scary. The situation was particularly bad in Dallas, Texas, where the West Nile virus killed 10 people and sickened more than 200. The city declared a state of emergency and began aerial spraying of a pesticide to kill the mosquitoes, even though residents argued that the pesticide could be more dangerous than the disease.

Why was the summer of 2012 so hospitable to the West Nile virus and the mosquitoes that carry it? Blame the weather. An extremely mild winter allowed more mosquitoes than usual to survive, while the unusually high temperatures in that scorching summer further increased their number by speeding up their life cycle. The economic crisis may have also played a role: Homeowners who were not able to pay their bank loans were forced to abandon their properties, sometimes leaving behind swimming pools that made excellent mosquito breeding grounds.

The severity of tropical diseases is also a matter of whether governments are capable — and willing — to defend their populations against infections. Dallas County was not doing some of the key things to slow the spread of West Nile, such as testing dead birds and setting mosquito traps to test for the presence of the disease. Tropical infections are thus as much related to government inaction as they are to climate.

Little Red Riding Hood is one of the most famous fairy tales in the world. The heroine is a young girl who is asked by her mother to take a basket of food and a bottle of wine to her grandmother. She goes into the forest and encounters a wolf. It cheats her, eats her, and disguises itself in Little Red's dress to visit the grandmother. Of course, it also eats the grandmother and lies in her bed. A hunter walks by the house, hearing the wolf snoring. He then cuts its belly open and saves Little Red together with her grandmother. They fill its belly with stones. When the wolf wakes up and tries to run away, its belly is too heavy for it to run. So, it falls and dies.

Many stories have symbolic meanings. For instance, the hood in this tale actually shows that Little Red is not mature. But why is the color of the hood red? According to analysts, the color red represents blood, or family connection. Also, the hood is given to Little Red by her grandmother, so things are passed down through generations.

As for the male roles, both the wolf and the hunter play the roles of a father in this tale. The wolf is the dark side of the father, who abuses, tricks and consumes the daughter. In contrast, the hunter represents the good side that kills the invader and protects the family.

There is another common symbol in this tale, namely the forest. Forests are places where special things often happen, or where heroes or heroines live or go in many fairy or folk tales, for example Snow White, Goldilocks, and Hansel and Gretel. This theme can be traced back to medieval and pre-medieval times, when most people lived in or near forests. A forest can sustain human life by providing food (animals and plants) and water. So, a forest symbolizes fertility. However, it's also a dangerous, unpredictable and wild place. In many stories, heroes and heroines enter the forest and turn into responsible persons. There is a transformation taking place.

Is it interesting to analyze folklore in this way? If so, you could try to decode another classic story.
