Some students prefer to take a gap year between high school and university, to work or to travel.

Do the advantages of this outweigh the disadvantages?

In today's world, there has been an 1 _____ of students taking a break from studying before pursuing 2 _____. While this trend is beneficial to some extent, I am firmly of the opinion that its shortcomings are weightier for the followers of this trend.

A gap year may enable students to 3 _____ real-life experiences that are beneficial to their future. These may include having a paid job, from which those who have just 4 _____ may learn many working skills, such as communication, teamwork and following orders. As a result, the youngsters taking a gap year are 5 _____ for their future jobs. Some may also travel the world and 6 _____ of 7 _____ and from different geographical contexts. In this globalised world, such knowledge is essential for developing a successful career.

However, I strongly believe the disadvantages of taking a gap year for recent high-school graduates are serious, far outweighing the advantages. The primary reason is that the young can be overwhelmed by the unwanted difficulties of life outside of school campus. For example, a 8 _____ can be exhausting for most school-leavers. Another significant reason is that to the youngsters without 9 _____, earning money and living without the discipline of 10 _____ could be more 11 _____ than returning to school after the gap year. Consequently, there could be a 12 _____ of intellectual workforce in the future as there will be fewer university students.

All in all, I personally believe that there are some serious drawbacks associated with a gap year that far outweigh the potential gains.
