

narrative tenses: describing specific incidents in the past

This happened when I was about five years old. My father had gone away on business for a few days and my brother and I were sleeping in my parents' bedroom. Before we went to bed that night, I had been reading a very scary story about a wicked witch. In the middle of the night I woke up with a start and saw that a figure in a dark coat was standing at the end of my bed. I screamed at the top of my voice.

- When we describe specific incidents in the past, we use narrative tenses, i.e. the past simple, past continuous, and past perfect simple or continuous.
- Use the past simple to talk about the main actions in a story (We went to bed... I woke up... I screamed).
- Use the past continuous to set the scene (We were sleeping in my parents' bedroom) and to describe actions in progress in the past (Somebody was standing at the end of my bed).
- Use the past perfect and the past perfect continuous to talk about the earlier past, i.e. things which happened before the main events (My father had gone away... I had been reading a story).

used to and would: describing repeated actions in the past

- Every summer my family rented an old house in the South of France. My sister and I used to walk to the harbour every morning and watch the fishermen cleaning their nets.
- Every night before we went to bed my mother would tell us a story, but she would never read them from a book – she would always make them up herself.
- When I was a teenager, my friends were always teasing me because of my red hair.

- We often use used to + infinitive as an alternative to the past simple to talk about things that we did repeatedly in the past.
- We can also use used to + infinitive to talk about situations or states which have changed, e.g. I used to have much longer hair when I was younger.
- We also use would + infinitive as an alternative to used to to talk about things that we did repeatedly in the past.
- However, we don't use would with stative verbs, i.e. to talk about situations or states which have changed NOT I would have much longer hair when I was younger.
- We can also use always + past continuous for things that happened repeatedly, especially when they were irritating habits.

⚠ When we describe past habits or repeated past actions we tend, for stylistic reasons, to use a mixture of used to, would, or the past simple (with adverbs of frequency). Used to and would make it clear that you are talking about something that happened regularly and often convey a sense of nostalgia.

- a Circle the right form. Tick if both are correct.

Corinne and I (used to be) / would be very close, but recently we've grown apart.

- When I came into the room, my aunt sat / was sitting with her back to me. When she turned round, I could see that her eyes were rather red and I was sure that she had been crying / had cried.
- Our grandmother always used to have / would always have a little surprise waiting for us when we visited.
- My uncle lived / used to live on his own because his wife died / had died several years earlier.
- When my brother was a child, he didn't use to look / he wouldn't look at all like my father, but the older he gets the more he looks like him.
- When I was small, I was always getting / I always used to get into trouble at school and my parents used to punish / would punish me by not letting me play with my friends at the weekend.
- Suddenly we heard a tremendous crash and we saw that a car crashed / had crashed into a tree and petrol poured / was pouring out of the car onto the road.

- b Put the verbs in the right form, using a narrative tense or would / used to.

My earliest memory

When I was about four or five, my grandmother, who was Polish, was living (live) in London, and we children often 1 _____ (spend) weekends at her flat. My grandfather 2 _____ (die) a couple of years earlier, so I suppose she was in need of company. We loved going there, as my grandmother 3 _____ (cook) special meals for us and 4 _____ (take) us for lovely walks in Regent's Park, which was quite nearby. One occasion that I remember really well was when I 5 _____ (invite) to stay with her on my own, without my brothers and sisters. On the first day, after lunch, my grandmother 6 _____ (tell) me that she 7 _____ (go) to have a rest, and that I should have a rest too. I 8 _____ (try) to sleep but I couldn't, so after a while I 9 _____ (get) up and 10 _____ (decide) to explore the flat. Everything was very quiet so I was convinced that my grandmother 11 _____ (sleep). The room I most 12 _____ (want) to explore was my grandfather's study, I imagine, precisely because I 13 _____ (tell) not to go in there. I opened the door and went in, and was immediately drawn to his large old desk. I 14 _____ (climb) onto the chair, and 15 _____ (see) on the desk a green pen in a kind of stand, with a bottle of ink.

I 16 _____ (ask) my parents for a real pen for a long time, but they 17 _____ (refuse), foreseeing the mess that I was almost bound to make with the ink. I picked up the pen and then tried to open the bottle of ink. At that moment I 18 _____ (hear) my grandmother's voice saying 'Christina? Where are you? What are you doing?' To my horror I 19 _____ (realize) that my grandmother 20 _____ (get up) out of bed and 21 _____ (come) towards the study. Two seconds later she 22 _____ (open) the door. I will never forget the awful feeling of shame that she 23 _____ (catch) me doing something that she 24 _____ (forbid) me to do.
