Are you interested in learning about different cultures? Do you love to travel, but don't want to feel like a tourist? Well, then, housesitting might be for you. House sitters live for free in people's homes. They take care of pets and do other tasks around the house while the homeowners are traveling. If you love to travel, like I do, but don't want to spend a lot of money, then you should try this new way of traveling.

Last year, I tried housesitting for the first time. I used a website that connects homeowners to travelers like me, who are interested in housesitting. I was surprised to see all of the houses to choose from – there are so many different types of homes, from modern apartments in famous, touristy cities, to large houses in towns that aren't well known.

My first housesit was for a couple in France. They were planning to travel for a month, and they needed someone to look after their house and their dog. The house was in a small town in the middle of the mountains and next to a beautiful lake. It was the kind of place that people dream about! And the best part was there were no tourists around!

When I traveled in the past, I always visited the touristy cities, so I didn't know what it was like to really live in the country. But, this experience was different. Every morning, I walked to the market in the nearest town to get some fresh bread and cheese, and every afternoon I took the dog for a walk around the lake. Because the town was so small, everyone knew one another. Before long, I began to make friends. My French quickly improved, and in a few short weeks, I felt like I was living the life of a French person.

Housesitting helped me to understand the French way of life. It was very different than being a tourist. In my opinion, housesitting is the best way to travel! I don't know if I can ever go back to traveling any other way.
