READING

Read the article and answer the questions.

If you look around at the gym, you'll see lots of people who are exercising to lose weight, get stronger or look better. But studies have shown that there are many other ways that exercise can help us – ways that can't be seen with the eyes. For example, did you know that exercise also makes us feel happier? Or that exercise can help us to relax and to sleep better at night?

Exercise doesn't just help us look great. It helps us feel great too. When we exercise our body produces fewer stress hormones and more of the hormones that make us feel happy. Because of this, doing any physical activity for 30 minutes three days a week can make us feel much happier and more relaxed. Also, small changes like running a little farther or a little faster or lifting heavier weights at the gym can help us feel better about ourselves.

Studies have also shown that exercise is helpful for our brains. In fact, exercise is one of the best things we can do for our brains. Scientists believe that physical activity helps us to make decisions, think, learn and remember things. What's more, during activities, like football or dance class, we need to think and act in the moment. Because of this, these activities help our brains even more than basic exercise.

Some people worry that exercise might make them tired, but the opposite is true. Research shows that workers who spend time exercising have more energy and get more done in the office than workers who sit still all day. Also, regular exercise can help us to fall asleep faster. And we all know that getting enough sleep is important for our energy levels!

There are so many ways exercising just a few times a week can help us. The next time you're sad and want to feel happy, or you're stressed and want to relax, the solution might only be a short walk or run away!
