Good morning. We want to welcome all you 1. _____ guys to this workshop on “Tips for Success” here at Faber College. I’m Terry Sargent, one of the counselors at Student Support Services.

Today we’ll get started by talking about “time management”, and 2. _____ give you some ideas on good study skills.

Well... In high school, 3. _____ your teachers and parents 4. _____ sure you did your homework, 5. _____ to school on time, and studied for your exams, right? They pretty much managed your schedule, your time. But in college, guess what: you’re on your own. Students have a lot of freedom here, and that’s not always easy to manage.

So, here is 6. _____ number one: use a calendar or planner. Either online or off. Don’t try to keep your schedule in your head. Write down your 7. _____ schedule for everything: classes, social plans, exercise or sports, and appointments. For 8. _____ things like deadlines or meetings, 9. _____ your smart phone to remind you a day before, or an hour before.

Tip number two: make a to-do list every day. Write down all the things you plan to do that day, or put them in your cell phone. Start with the most important first. But don’t put too many things on your list – keep your goals reasonable. When you finish something, cross it off your list. Before the day ends, try to start a new list for the next day.

And finally, tip number three: learn to say no. There are so many cool things to do on campus, so many new friends to hang out with – it’s 10. _____ to stick to a schedule. But sometimes it’s necessary to just say no and do what you planned.

Any questions so far? Sure? OK, then, let’s move on to the next topic.
