ANGER

We've all felt anger at some time, whether as faint (0) ANNOYANCE or blind rage. Anger is a normal, sometimes useful human emotion, but uncontrolled outbursts of temper can be (1) 'People who give free rein to their anger, (2) of the offence this may cause, haven't learnt to express themselves constructively,' says Martin Smolik, who runs weekend (3) courses in anger management. 'It is important to maintain your (4) and put your case in an assertive, not aggressive, manner without hurting others. Being assertive doesn't mean being pushy or demanding; it means being (5) of yourself and other people.' He adds that people who are easily angered are intolerant of (6) and frustration and, not surprisingly, find (7) to other people very difficult. But what causes people to behave like this? There is evidence to support the idea that some children may be born (8) and prone to anger. However, research also suggests that they are simply modelling their behaviour on that of older family members.

Travelling on a student budget

There's no nicer activity (0) ...THAN... planning adventures. Dreams of sun, sand, lively people and freedom (1) responsibility can be a welcome break from all the essays and exams (2) thrown our way at this time of year. (3) is more, there are a variety of ways that students can travel (4) having to sell old games consoles and textbooks in search of extra cash. A popular choice is interrailing around Europe; there are InterRail passes for a week and up to a month, ranging from as (5) as £152 to £365. Interrailing is an amazingly social experience, (6) , in my opinion, is unlike any other. Then there is backpacking. You could, should you wish to, hitchhike and set (7) camp on the sides of roads, but in many countries, travel is cheap (8) to suit even the most economically-minded globetrotter and it's possible to stay in pleasant accommodation for no more than you'd be paying for rent at university.
