
Passage 1

Get to Know Chiangklang

Amphoe Chianklang is a small district. It is approximately 277.15 square kilometers in size. Geography of Chianklang is a wide area valley surrounded by mountains. The neighboring districts of Chiangklang are Thung Chang in the north, Songkware on the northwest, Tha Wang Pha on the southwest and Pua on the south. The former capital of Nan was Pua and the old name of Nan was “Woara-Naknorn”. Surrounding towns are Puer, Ngob, and Pond. The city was invaded by Thai-Yai or Ngeaw. Nan capital was moved to the Nan river, which was Sobkorn and later changed to Chianklang.

Current governance of Chiangklang is separated into six sub-districts. They are Chiangklang, Praputtabath, Puer, Pratat, Payakeaw and Chiangkarn. 15% of the populations are hill-tribes and 85% of the populations are low land people 80% of them are involved in the agriculture industry, 5% of the employments are in the public sector. 15% are in miscellaneous. 88.61% are Buddhist and the rest are Christians and other religions.

Amphoe Chiangklang is located approximately 76 kilometers away from Amphoe Muang – the capital of Nan province. The Chiangklang village provides its population with public water and electricity surrounded by natural environment (highly dense tropical rain-forest).

Nan River plays an important part in the local agriculture industry and the people’s everyday life. There are many people from other parts of Thailand who moved to Nan due to its natural surroundings. Nan people welcome these migrants with open arms so long as they do not cause any trouble.
