

A Present perfect simple (1) ever, never

	I / you / we / they	he / she / it
+	I've been to Brazil.	She's been to Italy once.
-	We haven't seen Shrek 3 .	He hasn't spoken to me.
?	Have they arrived?	Has it rained recently?
✓	Yes, they have.	Yes, it has.
✗	No, haven't.	No, it hasn't.

- We form the Present perfect with have/has + the past participle. In spoken English we usually use the contracted form 've/s.
- The past participle of regular verbs is the same as the Past simple form, for example, work – worked. However, irregular verbs also have irregular past participles. For example,
be – was – been, see – saw – seen,
do – did – done, make – made – made.

- We use the Present perfect to talk about past actions or experiences in our lives, but we don't specify when they happened. We often use it with the adverbs recently and once, twice, etc.

I've been to Argentina.

NOT I've been to Argentina last year.

I've seen Robbie Williams in concert twice.

- We often use the Present perfect with ever in questions and never in negative sentences with an affirmative verb.

Have you ever seen the Queen?

No, I've never seen the Queen.

- Note the difference between been and gone.

She's been to New York. (= She was in New York, but now she's back.)

She's gone to New York. (= She's in New York or on her way there.)

B Present perfect simple (2) already, just, still, yet

+	I've already finished. She's just arrived.
?	Has he arrived yet?
-	We haven't finished yet.
-	They still haven't arrived.

- We use already in affirmative sentences to say that something happened before now.

- We use just in affirmative sentences to say that something has happened very recently.

- We use yet in questions to ask about something that we expect to happen. We use (not...) yet in negative sentences to say that something we expected to happen hasn't happened.

- We use still in negative sentences with the same meaning as yet.

C Present perfect simple (3) How long...?, for, since

How long have you been here?
I've been here for three hours. / I've been here since 3 p.m.
How long has he known her?
He's known her for six months. / He's known her since March.

- We use the Present perfect with How long...?, for and since to talk about situations which started in the past and continue in the present. We use for to indicate the duration of the situation and since to indicate when the situation began in the past.

 Unlike Italian, in English we do not use the Present simple with for and since to describe continuing situations.

I've known her for years. NOT ~~I know her for years.~~

D Present perfect simple vs Past simple

Present perfect	Past simple
Have you met the new teacher?	Yes, I met him yesterday.
I haven't seen the film yet.	I saw the film on Friday.
Have you spoken to John?	Did you speak to John last night?
She still hasn't done her homework.	She did her homework this morning.

- We use the Present perfect when we talk about an action in the past, but we don't specify the time.
- We use the Past simple when we talk about an action in the past, and we specify the time (two hours ago, yesterday, last week).

- We use the Present perfect with How long...?, for and since when the situation or action, or period of time is not finished. We can use the Past simple with How long...? and for and from... to when the time is finished and the action is completed.

How long have you lived in London?

I've lived in London for several years/since 2005.
(= I still live in London.)

How long did you live in London?

I lived in London for ten years/from 1995 to 2005.
(= Now I live somewhere else.)
