I spent the best summer of my life in a little cabin with five other boys, three years ago. We were ten years old and we stayed at that camp for three weeks. There were adults there, of course. The camp instructors shaped our days into some kind of order: meals, swimming, competitions or trips to hidden places in the woods. But, there were no parents and there were no computers or video games. There were movies sometimes, but the whole camp had to watch them together—even the girls. On the first day, I hated it, I wanted my bedroom, my TV and my mom's spaghetti, but by the end, I learned so much. We went kayaking on the lake and hiking in the woods. I started painting—a hobby I still enjoy today. We played guitar and sang songs. By the end of the three weeks, I had so many new friends. Some of them were even girls!
