"Peril at End House" - Agatha Christie

We were sitting on one of terraces of Majestic Hotel. It is biggest hotel in St. Loo and stands in its own grounds on headland overlooking sea. The gardens of hotel lay below us freely interspersed with palm trees. The sea was of a deep and lovely blue, sky clear and sun shining with all single-hearted fervour August sun should (but in England so often does not) have. There was vigorous humming of bees, pleasant sound—and altogether nothing could have been more ideal.

We had only arrived last night, and this was first morning of what we proposed should be week's stay. If only these weather conditions continued, we should indeed have perfect holiday.

"Gone with the Wind" - Margaret Mitchell

Scarlett O'Hara was not beautiful, but men seldom realized it when caught by her charm as Tarleton twins were. In her face were too sharply blended delicate features of her mother, Coast aristocrat of French descent, and heavy ones of her florid Irish father. But it was arresting face, pointed of chin, square of jaw. Her eyes were pale green without touch of hazel, starred with bristly black lashes and slightly tilted at ends. Above them, her thick black brows slanted upward, cutting startling oblique line in her magnolia-white skin—that skin so prized by Southern women and so carefully guarded with bonnets, veils and mittens against hot Georgia suns.

Seated with Stuart and Brent Tarleton in cool shade of porch of Tara, her father's plantation, that bright April afternoon of 1861, she made pretty picture. Her new green flowered-muslin dress spread its twelve yards of billowing material over her hoops and exactly matched flat-heeled green morocco slippers her father had recently brought her from Atlanta.
