

Controversy Surrounding Vermont's "No Whistling Underwater" Law

Montpelier, Vermont - Vermont's unusual law that says you can't whistle underwater is causing quite a stir. Some people say it's a silly rule that should be scrapped, while others argue it's part of what makes Vermont special.

This old law has been mostly forgotten until recently when it became a hot topic in the state. Critics of the law want it gone, saying it doesn't make sense anymore, and there are more important things for lawmakers to focus on.

State Senator Sarah Miller is leading the effort to get rid of the law. "In a state known for its beauty and forward-thinking values, having this kind of law on the books doesn't look good. We need to show that Vermont is serious about updating our laws," Senator Miller explained.

But not everyone agrees. Some folks think the law is a fun reminder of Vermont's history. Dr. Edward Johnson, a Vermont native and historian, said, "Even though the law seems strange today, it's part of our past. It reminds us of the old days when Vermonters used to whistle while swimming. We shouldn't forget our heritage."

The debate has even made its way into national TV shows and social media, with comedians making jokes about Vermont's unique rules.

Now, Vermont's lawmakers have to decide what to do with the "No Whistling Underwater" law. They'll be listening to what people have to say before making a choice.

One thing's for sure: Vermonters care a lot about their special laws, even the ones that might seem strange. This debate is about more than just whistling underwater; it's about deciding what should stay the same and what should change in our laws as the world keeps evolving.

Decide if the statements are true or false based on the text.

1. True/False: The "No Whistling Underwater" law is a recent addition to Vermont's legal code.
2. True/False: Critics of the law argue that it is outdated and should be removed.
3. True/False: State Senator Sarah Miller is leading the campaign to keep the law in place.
4. True/False: Dr. Edward Johnson believes that the law is an important part of Vermont's history.
5. True/False: The "No Whistling Underwater" law has never received attention beyond Vermont's borders.
6. True/False: Vermont's lawmakers are planning to make a decision about the law without gathering public input.
7. True/False: The article suggests that Vermonters are indifferent to their unique laws.
8. True/False: The debate about the law reflects broader discussions about preserving tradition and adapting to a changing world.

Complete the sentences using the words in bold from the text.

1. Elected _____ are responsible for creating and amending the laws of the land.
2. After years of disuse, they decided to _____ the old, broken-down car in the backyard.
3. The _____ artifact found in the ancient tomb left archaeologists puzzled due to its extreme rarity.
4. In our rapidly _____ world, adapting to new technologies is essential for staying relevant in the job market.
5. The city's _____ urban planning policies aim to create a sustainable and modern metropolis.
6. As a proud _____ of the coastal town, she cherished the memories of her childhood by the sea.
7. The news of the mayor's resignation caused quite a _____ in the small town.
8. The museum was dedicated to preserving the cultural _____ of the indigenous people.
9. The mysterious, glowing object in the night sky seemed incredibly _____ to the observers.
10. The community rallied together to _____ the invasive species threatening the local ecosystem.