

acts scenes playwright stage direction aside script
monologue dramatic irony props costume dialogue

In the world of theatre, a play is divided into several parts, each with its unique parts and purpose. These parts are known as _____ and _____. The person who writes a play is called a _____.

During a play, the actors follow specific instructions called _____, which guide their movements and interactions on stage. These directions help create a smooth and coordinated performance. An _____ is a line spoken by an actor directly to the audience, revealing a character's true thoughts or feelings.

Sometimes, a character may deliver a lengthy speech called a _____. This is an opportunity for the character to express their innermost thoughts, often when no other characters are on stage. This can help the audience understand the character's motivations and emotions.

One of the most intriguing aspects of theater is _____. This occurs when the audience knows something that the characters on stage do not. This creates tension and anticipation as the audience watches events unfold.

To bring a play to life, various elements are used, including _____ and _____. These objects help create a realistic setting and atmosphere for the story. Additionally, the characters wear _____ that reflect their roles and time period.

Throughout the performance, the characters engage in spoken interactions known as _____. These conversations drive the plot forward and allow the audience to connect with the characters. All of these _____ elements are _____ and _____ in a _____.