

Piercing through the ages

People have their ears, noses, eyebrows, and lips pierced for centuries. Ötzi the Iceman, who died about five and a half thousand years ago, had both ears pierced.

In the Western world, piercing went out of fashion in the Middle Ages until about 1500. Then, men and women started earrings again.

Eventually, people started having piercings on other parts of their body. Why? Perhaps to show how much money they had, or because they wanted to be different.

Today, piercings are popular again. In the 20th century, piercing other of the body became popular because of hippy and punk culture. Just remember, when you have a piercing, you should keep the area clean or you might get an .
