

WEIRD LAWS AROUND THE WORLD

Now, let's go to Switzerland, a country known for its beautiful landscapes. But, did you know that in Switzerland it's illegal to own just one guinea pig as a pet? According to Swiss law, you must have at least two guinea pigs if you want to keep them as companions.

It is fascinating to see how these laws can vary so much from one place to another. What might seem completely normal in one country can be very unusual in another. This is a reminder of the diversity and uniqueness of our world's legal systems.

Next, continuing with places in Europe, we arrive in France. A place known for the delicious food and history. But France also has unusual laws. One law prohibits naming a pig "Napoleon." It's perfectly fine to name your pig anything else, but not Napoleon!

The first law takes us to Japan. In Japan, there's a weird law that might surprise you. It's illegal to dance after midnight! Can you imagine not being allowed to dance after a certain time?

Finally, our next destination is Thailand, a country known for its vibrant culture and beautiful beaches. Thailand has a very unique law. It's illegal to leave your house without wearing underwear. Yes, you heard it right! Wearing underwear is an obligation when you go outside in Thailand.

Have you ever been curious about the unusual laws that exist in different countries? Join us on a journey as we uncover some of the quirkiest and weirdest laws from around the world.
