One night—it was on twentieth of March, 1888—I was returning from journey to patient (for I had now returned to civil practice). when my way led me through Baker Street.

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" - Arthur Conan Doyle

Our village, King's Abbot, is, I imagine, very much like any other village. Our big town is Cranchester, nine miles away. We have large railway station, small post office, and two rival "General Stores."

"The murder of Roger Ackroyd" - Agatha Christie

If I had had hat in my hand, nothing but respect would have prevented me from throwing that hat up to ceiling. I had not seen Mr. Franklin since he was boy, living along with us in this house.

"The Moonstone" - Wilkie Collins

As house, Barton Cottage, though small, was comfortable and compact: but as cottage it was defective, for building was regular, roof was tiled, window shutters were not painted green, nor were walls covered with honeysuckles.

"Sense and Sensibility" - Jane Austen

Ackroyd has always interested me by being man more impossibly like country squire than any country squire could really be. He reminds one of red-faced sportsmen who always appeared early in first act of old-fashioned musical comedy, setting being village green.

"The murder of Roger Ackroyd" - Agatha Christie

I had called upon my friend, Mr. Sherlock Holmes, one day in autumn of last year and found him in deep conversation with very stout, florid-faced, elderly gentleman with fiery red hair. With apology for my intrusion, I was about to withdraw when Holmes pulled me abruptly into room and closed door behind me.

From being brisk and bright, he now became, most unaccountably, slow, solemn, and pondering young man.

"This question has two sides," he said. " Objective side, and Subjective side. Which are we to take?"

He had had German education as well as French.

"The Moonstone" - Wilkie Collins

Sir John Middleton was good looking man about forty. He had formerly visited at Stanhill, but it was too long for his young cousins to remember him. His countenance was thoroughly good-humoured; and his manners were as friendly as style of his letter.

"The Moonstone" - Wilkie Collins

innocent remark about our new neighbor created diversion. house next door, Larches, has recently been taken by stranger. To Caroline's extreme annoyance, she has not been able to find out anything about him, except that he is foreigner.

"The murder of Roger Ackroyd" - Agatha Christie

I went home to Saxe-Coburg Square, and I took advice of my assistant. But he could not help me in any way. He could only say that if I waited I should hear by post. But that was not quite good enough, Mr. Holmes. I did not wish to lose such place without struggle, so, as I had heard that you were good enough to give advice to poor folk who were in need of it, I came right away to you."

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" - Arthur Conan Doyle

"I think, Edward," said Mrs. Dashwood, as they were at breakfast the last morning, "you would be happier man if you had any profession to engage your time and give interest to your plans and actions.

"Sense and Sensibility" - Jane Austen

"No, sir. But I want to find out about them, and who they are, and what their object was in playing this prank—if it was prank—upon me. It was pretty expensive joke for them, for it cost them two and thirty pounds."

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" - Arthur Conan Doyle

It's all clear enough. It fits in without flaw. At twenty-five minutes past nine, Captain Paton is seen passing lodge; at nine-thirty or thereabouts, Mr. Geoffrey Raymond hears some one in here asking for money and Mr. Ackroyd refusing. What happens next? Captain Paton leaves same way—through window.

"The murder of Roger Ackroyd" - Agatha Christie

I walked down to station with them, and then wandered through streets of little town, finally returning to hotel, where I lay upon sofa and tried to interest myself in yellow-backed novel.
