Celebrity weddings

A reader commented on my article from last week. He said it was wrong to be so interested in the weddings of people we don't even know – why do we want to find out all the details of an actor or pop star's big day? I think really it's because we see their faces and read about their lives so often – we feel like we know these people.

At the same time, famous people are like characters in a fairy tale to us. Their lives seem exciting and glamorous. A celebrity wedding is a bit like Cinderella getting married to her prince, and we all want to be there to watch. But we forget that what we see is a public image. They may look perfect but these are actual people, not characters in a story.

Because of all this attention, many celebrities nowadays get married in secret, to keep the crowds of fans and photographers away. But it's not easy to keep the event out of the spotlight. To do this, some celebrities have to hold the ceremony in a faraway location. For instance, actors Michael Fassbender and Alicia Vikander got married on a farm on the island of Ibiza, which was difficult for most photographers to get to.

Yolanda Burton, a celebrity wedding planner I spoke to recently, says she usually advises couples not to 'hide completely'. 'Photos of a secret wedding will be worth thousands of dollars, so photographers will do anything to get them – even use helicopters or drones to take shots from the air!' she said. 'I think the best idea is for the couple to sell exclusive photos to only one magazine. That way, the couple have control over the moments they share. So, the fans get their "fairytale pictures" and the couple also have their own private memories of their wedding day.'

I too love looking at celebrity wedding photos, but I do think it's a shame if you have to hide on your special day. No one should have to worry about that. It's all about respect, really: celebrities or not, the bride and groom should be the ones to decide how to spend the happiest day of their life – and who to share it with.
