The foolish dog thought there was another dog in the water, holding another juicy bone. The greedy dog wanted to have that bone too. He growled and barked at his own reflection in the water. Sources : <https://serempak.id/atraksi-matahari-di-tugu-khatulistiwa/>

As an equatorial city, one cannot miss the Equator Monument when visiting Pontianak. The equator, or khatulistiwa in local tongue, is the imaginary line on the spheroid, equidistant from its poles, dividing it into northern and southern hemispheres. Located on Jalan Khatulistiwa, it takes 30 minutes to reach there from the city center. This monument was built in 1928 by the Expedition Team led by a Dutch geographer in the form of a stake and an arrow. Then in 1990, the Equator Monument was renovated by adding a dome to protect the original monument and creating a duplicate monument five times larger than the original.

Entering inside of the Equator Monument, visitors will see lots of photographs displayed on the walls of the building telling the history of the monument. If you need more information, the guides there will be very happy to recount detailed story behind the pictures. After being renovated, the monument building offers spots for tourist to take artistic photographs. On leaving the building, the visitors can get a certificate of appreciation from the Municipal Government.

Apart from that, the visitors can enjoy outdoor activities presenting the "natural miracles" of the equator line. Twice a year, the sun reaches its zenith on the Vernal Equinox (March 21st-23rd) and the Autumnal Equinox (September 21st-23rd). These bi-annual events are commemorated as the Municipal Government will hold festivals in order to enliven and introduce the local uniqueness. On these days, known also as culmination days, visitors and locals enjoy a five-minute shadow-less moment in the best 'hot spot' of Borneo.
