What is your body saying about you?

You accidentally meet the head teacher of your school in the street. You're smiling and speaking in a friendly voice, but your body is saying "I feel uncomfortable and shy 1) ..... you!" We've all been in situations like this, and more often than not, we fail to hide our feelings from the person we're talking to. That's because up to 60% of all human communication is nonverbal body language. The problem is that body language is less 2) ..... controlled than your speech. So, 3) ..... some physical gestures might send positive messages to people, others send negative ones that you'd probably prefer not to share. For example, maintaining eye 4) ..... and tilting your head slightly shows that you're being honest and are interested in what your partner is saying. But touching your face and crossing your arms are clear signs that you're uncomfortable in someone's company and may even be lying. So, what can you do to make sure you send the right message? Well, luckily, most cultures are consistent in the body language they use, so it's possible 5) ..... what body movements to look out for. Or, of course, you could just speak to people over the phone!
