Photographer David Slater visited Sulawesi, an island in Indonesia. He was photographing the monkeys there and they were jumping all over his camera and camera bag. One of the bravest monkeys were playing with the camera, and it took a photo. The monkey took over 100 photos that day, but the one that became a classic was this photo: the monkey was smiling when he took the selfie.

David shared his experience when he took photos of wild animals: “Whether you want to take pictures of big mammals or tiny insects, it can be helpful to spend time researching the wildlife common to the area. Knowing what time of day the animal is most active and where it is typically found can increase your chances of seeing the animal and getting a good shot. The internet is a good resource”.

Questions

- 1) Where did David visit?
  - A) An island
  - B) A desert
  - C) A beach
- 2) What were the monkeys doing?
  - A) They were eating.
  - B) They were jumping around.
  - C) They were sleeping.
- 3) How many photos did the bravest monkey take?
  - A) Under 100 photos
  - B) 100 photos
  - C) More than 100 photos
- 4) What did David talk about taking photos of wildlife animals?
  - A) We should only take photos of big mammals.
  - B) We should research the wildlife common to the area.
  - C) We should only take photos of small insects.
- 5) We should find out the time when ...
  - A) the animal is most active.
