Read the passage and then write True or False (1 point)

Quoc Tu Giam, also known as the Temple of Literature, is a very old and special place in Hanoi, Vietnam. It was built in the year 1070. Back then, it was like the very first university in Vietnam. People built it to remember and honor a wise teacher named Confucius.

Imagine a place that's a bit like a school but also like a beautiful garden. That's exactly what the Temple of Literature is like! It's filled with pretty gardens, peaceful yards, and special Vietnamese-style buildings that look like they're from a fairy tale.

A long time ago, people would come to this 'university' to learn about Confucianism, which is a big word for a way of thinking that's been important in Vietnam for a very, very long time. The students who did really well in their studies had their names written on special stones.

Even today, the Temple of Literature is a special place where people visit to learn about Vietnam's history and how important it is for everyone to have a chance to learn. It's like a treasure that reminds us of how much we value learning in Vietnam.

(*Vocabulary: Confucius (n) – Khổng tử; Confucianism (n) – Nho giáo)
