

WHILE VS WHEN

When we use the past continuous (or progressive) we usually see a short action that interrupts the long action, like this:

Past Progressive

A Shorter Action Interrupts a Longer Action

While I was cooking dinner, the phone rang.

This is known as “interrupted action”, there is something happening, when another thing interrupts that action:

	I was watching TV	when	Jim knocked the door.
--	--------------------------	-------------	------------------------------

As you can see in the example, something interrupts another something, and a helpful word that always goes with this kind of sentence is the “WHEN” (cuando): a person was doing something “WHEN” another thing broke that action.

Another way of talking about this situation is using the connector “WHILE” (mientras):

While	I was watching TV	,	Jim knocked the door
--------------	--------------------------	---	-----------------------------

A thing was happening, and then something interrupted the action that WAS happening.

Two tools to say the same thing:

‘when’ + short action (past simple tense)
‘while’ + long action (past continuous tense)

I was watching TV when Jim knocked the door.

	I was watching TV	when	Jim knocked the door.
When	Jim knocked the door	,	I was watching TV
	Jim knocked the door	while	I was watching TV
While	I was watching TV	,	Jim knocked the door
