OVERTOURISM

A Crowds of tourists wait for hours to look at the painting of the Mona Lisa in Paris. Lots of cruise ships with thousands of passengers enter the harbour of Venice. A long line of climbers wait on the side of Mount Everest to climb to the top. These are all examples of overtourism or, in other words, more tourists than a place can deal with.

B Tourism is important for money and jobs in many countries, but large numbers of visitors can also be a danger to famous places. For example, Venice in Italy has got a population of around 300,000 people, but according to many online sources it has over 24 million visitors a year. There are problems with traffic, rubbish and damage to buildings. It's also a problem for local people because the price of houses and food in restaurants increases in popular tourist areas, so it becomes difficult for local people to live there.

C Is there a way to stop overtourism? Some places are increasing the price of tickets to museums and famous buildings. Cities like Amsterdam and Paris have a tourist tax. Cities collect this money to help to pay for collecting rubbish and repairing streets and buildings. Another way is to limit numbers. According to an online article by Forbes, in 2016 there were 10,000 tourists a day from cruise ships on the Greek island of Santorini between May and September. Now there is a limit of 8,000 a day. The Peruvian tourist board reported that in 2018, there were over 1.5 million visitors to the historic site of Machu Picchu in Peru. Now there is a time limit of four hours to control the number of people passing through it in each part of the day.

D What can we do to stop overtourism? For your next sightseeing trip, why not visit some small towns and places that aren't as popular with tourists? Or plan your visit for a time when the number of visitors is low. Spend money in local restaurants and hotels. Above all, be careful not to damage buildings and don't leave rubbish.
