Jane Eyre

by Charlotte Brontë

The manor-house of Ferndean was a simple building of considerable age, medium size, and buried deep in a wood. I had heard of it before. Mr Rochester often spoke of it, and sometimes went there. His father had purchased the estate for use as a hunting ground. He would have let the house, but could find no tenant because of its poor and inconvenient site. Ferndean then remained uninhabited and unfurnished, with the exception of some two or three rooms fitted up for the accommodation of Mr Rochester when he went there in the season to shoot.

To this house I came one dark evening marked by the characteristics of sad sky, cold gale, and continued rain. The last mile I performed on foot, having dismissed the chaise and driver with the double payment I had promised. Even when within a very short distance of the manor-house, you could see nothing of it, so thick and dark grew the timber of the gloomy wood about it. Iron gates between granite pillars showed me where to enter, and passing through them, I found myself at once in the twilight of close-ranked trees. There was a grass-grown track descending the forest aisle between wild shrubs and under branched arches. I followed it, expecting soon to reach the dwelling; but it stretched on and on, it would far and farther: no sign of habitation or grounds was visible.

I thought I had taken a wrong direction and lost my way. The darkness of dusk gathered over me. I looked round in search of another road. There was none: all was a tangle of trees, overshadowing leaves and dense summer vegetation – no opening anywhere.

I proceeded: at last my way opened, the trees thinned a little; presently I beheld a railing, then the house – scarce, by this dim light, distinguishable from the trees; so damp and green were its decaying walls. Entering a portal, fastened only by a latch*, I stood within a space of enclosed ground, from which the wood swept away in a semicircle. There were no flowers, no garden-beds; only a broad gravel-walk bordering a stretch of grass, and this set in the heavy frame of the forest. The house presented two pointed gables* in its front; the windows were latticed* and narrow: the front door was narrow too, one step led up to it. The whole looked, as the host of the Rochester Arms had said, "quite a desolate spot". It was as still as a church on a week-day: the pattering rain on the forest leaves was the only sound.

"Can there be life here?" I asked.

Yes, life of some kind there was; for I heard a movement ... that narrow front door was unclosing, and some shape was about to issue from the house.

It opened slowly: a figure came out into the twilight and stood on the step; a man without a hat: he stretched forth his hand as if to feel whether it rained. Dusk as it was, I had recognised him – it was my master, Edward Fairfax Rochester, and no other.

* latch: catch for fastening a door or gate.

* gables: the triangular top end of the wall of a building where it meets the sloping parts of a roof

* latticed: made from small pieces of glass which are held in place by metal strips

I've just finished my A-level exams. Now, the summer holidays begin! You know, here in England, we sit our first 1) exams at the end of 2) school. That means I started doing exams seven years ago! Also, before we finish 3) school at sixteen, we take our GCSEs. Many students find jobs after that, but most students stay on at sixth 4) college. Another two years of hard work brings us to where I am now. But, do you know what? If I've passed my A-levels, I'll start my 5) education at university - where three more years of examinations will be waiting!

Kirsty, 18 years, Nottingham

Interesting post, Kirsty! I'll tell you what happens in Poland. Here, children can do three years of 1) education, but only the last year of nursery school is compulsory. Then, pupils attend six years of primary school before beginning 2) secondary school. At 16, we sit exams to see if we'll go to a senior secondary school, a vocational school or a 3) school. We sit the Matura exams at 18 if we want to enter university. At university, most 4) degrees last for four years, although many also do a 5) course afterwards.

E.R.A.S.M.U.S.

Today, many teenagers can't wait for the opportunity to pack their bags and head off on an adventure to a foreign country. Fortunately, a highly successful European education and training programme launched in 1987 has so far enabled over two million university students to spend time studying and working abroad. The scheme is named after the Dutch philosopher Desiderius Erasmus of Rotterdam (1466-1536), who travelled and studied in various European cities including Paris and Cambridge. Called 'Erasmus', it is the EU's flagship education programme. Erasmus is both an appropriate and clever name as the letters stand for European Region Action Scheme for the Mobility of University Students. [1] It not only encourages students to travel abroad and supports them while they are there but it also promotes and funds co-operation between universities and their staff across Europe. Erasmus is one of the most successful programmes ever put in place by the European Community. The vast majority of universities from all the European countries take part in the programme. [2] Current figures show that over 200,000 students and 25,000 staff members make the move each year and this number is constantly growing. Students who decide to sign up for the scheme either study at a university abroad or do an internship in a foreign company for three months to a year; this time spent away from home is recognised and validated by their own university, provided that certain agreed terms are respected. An important aspect of the programme is that students do not have to pay any fees to the foreign university and there are also a number of grants available for the less financially privileged scholars. [3]

For many young students, the Erasmus experience is their first time living abroad and for some it's their first time away from home. It is undoubtedly an important period in their lives and can have a determining effect on their future. [4] In fact, studies show that time spent abroad not only enriches students' language skills and academic careers but also their intercultural skills, their self-confidence and their self-reliance. Therefore, having an Erasmus exchange on your CV increases a student's chances of employment in the future. What's more, students who have spent time abroad seem to be more open about their future options and more prepared to embrace other cultures. Some respected academics have even suggested that former Erasmus students will be the backbone of a future pan-European identity.

- A Most students find that they are eligible for a bank loan to pay for their studies abroad.
- B Its principal aim is to foster understanding and innovation across the continent through student and staff exchange programmes.
- C In all, more than 4,000 third level institutions in 33 countries participate.
- D More specifically, it can be especially helpful when you want to get a job.
- E Some participants can also benefit from low rent or even free accommodation.

4 Read the text again and answer the questions.

- 1 Why do you think the Erasmus programme is named after the Dutch philosopher?
- 2 What is the aim of the Erasmus programme?
- 3 Who is the programme designed for?
- 4 What financial help exists for poorer students?
- 5 According to the text, how does the programme enrich a student's life?
- 6 What is the author's purpose?
